George C. Marshall Research
Foundation
Drawer 920
Lexington, VA 24450

Dear Mr. Lyle:

On Tuesday, June 30, 1981, Mr. Russ Fisher of this organization visited Mr. John Jacobs, and reviewed several documents in the William F. Friedman Collection. After discussions with Mr. Jacobs, it seemed apparent that certain classified documents in the collection might be on open shelving, available to researchers and visitors. Mr. Fisher suggested that, upon his return to Ft. Meade, he review our listing of classified documents held in the collection to determine which had been declassified, and which are still considered sensitive thus requiring protection commensurate with their current classification.

Attached is a list of those documents noted on our inventory which we still consider to be sensitive, and which to the best of our knowledge have never been declassified. Please be kind enough to remove these documents from public access and insure that only persons with certified clearance be permitted to view them.

I hope that the documents concerning or written by General Marshall and Mr. Friedman which Mr. Fisher presented to Mr. Jacobs were of interest to you and merit inclusion in your collections. Be assured that if we declassify and release any other documents of this nature, we will be pleased to forward copies.

If information comes to our attention which pertains to the classification of any of the other documents on our inventories of material in your possession, we will inform you.

Sincerely,

CHARLES R. WARE

M/R: Mr. R. Fisher visited the G.C. Marshall Library in Lexington, VA on 30 June to review classified documents in the W.F. Friedman collection. Although he actually did not see any classified documents from this collection on the open shelves (the collection was being relocated and reorganized), Mr. Jacobs, one of the Library's curators, told him he was reasonably sure that some documents marked CONFIDENTIAL and RESTRICTED had not been segregated from open display and therefore were accessible to uncleared researchers. Mr. Fisher suggested that we review NSA's listing of classified documents in that collection to see if any were found which should be removed and placed in a secure file. We would then notify Mr. Jacobs who agreed to withdraw them from the open shelves. This letter serves to finalize that action.
